Class Requirements

This class will utilize commercial full-length films, documentaries, and docudramas to illuminate and demonstrate sociological, concepts, phenomena and important social issues. The students will watch and discuss videos presented in class each week and some videos that students will be required to watch at home. Assigned videos to be watched at home can rented at local video stores or checked out at the Marriott library at the reserve desk. There is no textbook for the class. Students will discuss and analyze all the videos and movies in terms of basic sociological concepts, phenomena and social issues that will be presented and discussed in class. Videos will be available on line on blackboard, or can be rented at local video stores or obtained from Marriott Library. In that this course relies heavily on videos, students who find any of the videos objectionable should consider not taking the class.

There will be one midterm, a final exam, and paper for this class. The exams will be six to eight page take-home exams in which the students will analyze the videos in terms of relevant social theories, concepts, and issues. There will also be one assigned paper on a video from the suggested video list. If a student wants to write on a video not on the assigned list, she must first clear it with the instructor. The paper should be double-spaced and six to eight pages in length. Exams and papers will be graded in terms of the student's ability to define and apply relevant sociological concepts, principles, research, and theories addressed in this class. Each exam is worth 35 points and the paper is also worth 35 points, making a total of 105 points, five of which will be considered bonus points.

Goals of the Course

There are four main goals for this course. The first is the use of movies, documentaries, and docudramas to illuminate sociological phenomena and events and effectively use these mediums to teach basic sociological models and concepts. The second is to utilize different types of media as a means of teaching students to apply relevant sociological models, concepts, and research to the real world, and thereby see the world through a sociological lens that allows them to analyze and think about the world in sociological terms. The third goal is evaluate movies in terms of the extent to which they uncritically transmit stereotypes regarding gender, race, ethnicity, poverty, important social issues, and conventional views and ideological explanations of social life and social change. The final goal of this class is for students to write papers in which they carefully define and apply sociological concepts to the media and the real world.
Assigned Videos: Videos will be available on line on Blackboard, or they can be rented or checked out from the Marriott Library. Instructor’s copies are also available.
