Movies, documentaries, and docudramas illuminate sociological phenomena and events and can introduce sociological models and concepts. As we become familiar with sociological models, concepts, and research we can see how they may play out in the real world. Sometimes movies may uncritically transmit stereotypes, misconceptions and ideologies regarding gender, race, ethnicity, poverty, social change, and social and political life. We’ll develop critical tools for better understanding how these portrayals may reinforce existing views and how to challenge them.

You will learn to apply concepts taken from social science in a way that will enhance your judgment and help you to make better decisions in both your personal and public life.
Goals of the Course

There are three main goals for this course. The first is the use of movies, documentaries, and docudramas to illuminate sociological phenomena and events and effectively use these mediums to teach basic sociological models and concepts. The second is to utilize different types of media as a means of teaching students how to apply relevant sociological models, concepts, and research to movies and to the real world, and thereby see the world through a sociological lens that allows them to analyze and think about the world in sociological terms. The third goal is to evaluate movies in terms of the extent to which they uncritically transmit stereotypes, misconceptions and ideologies regarding gender, race, ethnicity, poverty, social change, and social and political life. Ultimately, the goal of this course is to help students apply concepts taken from social science in a way that will enhance their judgment and help them make better decisions in both their personal and public life.

Class Requirements

This class will utilize commercial full-length films, documentaries, and docudramas to illuminate and demonstrate sociological, concepts, phenomena and important social issues. The students will watch and discuss videos. Some of the videos will be presented in class, while others will be available online, and can also be obtained from local video stores and the Marriott Library. All the videos can be accessed through Canvas at the class webpage, where they can be watched on a computer or patched into a television. Each of these videos will be online for a period of three weeks. There is no textbook for the class, but students will be required to watch the equivalent of two full-length videos every week. Students will discuss and analyze all the videos and movies in terms of basic sociological concepts, phenomena and social issues that will be presented and discussed in class. In that this course relies heavily on videos as core content, students who find any of the videos objectionable should consider not taking the class.

There will be one midterm, a final exam, and paper for this class. The midterm exam will be an exam wherein students will be graded on how effectively they can analyze various movies in terms of their sociological content. Students can choose to take either one, but not both.

There will also be one assigned paper on a video from the suggested video list. In this paper, the student is expected to analyze a movie in terms of theories and concepts addressed in the course. If a student wants to write on a video not on the assigned list, she must first clear it with the instructor. The paper should be double-spaced and six to eight pages in length. It constitutes roughly a third of the student’s grade. Exams and papers will be graded in terms of the student’s ability to define and apply relevant sociological concepts, principles, research, and theories addressed in this class. Students are urged to try to stay one week ahead when watching videos. Because most of the conceptual material will be addressed in class, class attendance is crucial. There are no perquisites for this course. Plagiarism will result in an E grade for an assignment, so be sure to do your own work and make clear citations following either ASA or APA guidelines. With reasonable notice given to the student, the syllabus may be changed and does not constitute a contract.

Grading Policy

Each exam is worth 70 points and the paper is worth 60 points, making a total of 200 points. The letter grade will reflect percentage score of the student on all assignments and exams. The student’s letter grade will reflect the student’s total percentage for all assignments. The grading scale is outlined below.

Students With Disabilities

The University of Utah seeks to provide equal access to its programs, services and activities for people with disabilities. If you will need accommodations in the class, reasonable prior notice needs to be given to the Center for Disability Services, 162 Olpin Union Building, 581-5020 (V/TDD). CDS will work with you and the instructor to make arrangements for accommodations. All information in the course will be made available in alternative format with prior notification to the Center for Disability Services. (www.hr.utah.edu/oeo/ada/guide/faculty)
