I. Goals:

The primary goal of this class is to give students a sociological understanding of religion as a powerful, important, and influential social institution that is associated with many social processes and phenomena that motivate and influence how people act and see the world around them. The class will rely on a variety of methods that include comparative analysis, theoretical explanations, ethnographic studies, and empirical studies designed to help students better understand religion and its impact upon societies, global-international events, and personal well-being. This overview of the nature, functioning, and diversity of religious institutions should help students make more discerning decisions regarding cultural, political, and moral issues that are often influenced by religion.

II. Topics To Be Covered:

The course is laid out in two parts. The first section begins with a review of conventional and theoretical conceptions of religion and an overview of the importance and centrality of religion to human societies. It emphasizes the diversity and nature of "religious experience" in terms of different denominations, cultures, classes, and individuals. This is followed by overview of sociological assumptions and theories and their application to religion. A variety of theoretical schools including, functionalism, conflict theory, exchange theory, sociology of knowledge, sociobiology, feminist theory, symbolic interactionism, postmodern and critical theory will be addressed and applied to religion.

The second part of the course begins with a comparative analysis of the major religions in terms of beliefs, values, norms, practices, and rituals as seen from different theoretical points of view. The comparative analysis surveys Western, Eastern, New Age, and Native American religions, and unaffiliated groups in terms of their defining beliefs and practices, and concludes with an analysis of the major commonalities and differences between Eastern and Western Religions, Alternative, Native American religions, and unaffiliated groups that include agnostics, atheists and existentialists. This is followed by a discussion of issues associated with modernity, fundamentalism, terrorism, a critical analysis of religion, and the future of religion.

Throughout the course issues associated with the benefits of religion, and issues associated with social change, patriarchy, prejudice, violence, sexism, conflicts between science and religion, modernity, and the separation of church and state will be addressed. The course concludes with a study of major trends in religion in the 21st century.

III. Pedagogy, Exams, and Papers:

This class will utilize a variety of teaching approaches that include lectures, in online responses and discussion, films, and guest speakers representing different religious perspectives. There will be a midterm, a final exam and a paper. The midterm and final exams will be objective multiple-choice exams.

The paper can be from four to six double spaced pages in length. There are four options for the paper. The first option calls upon the student to do participant observer or ethnographic research on a religion or religious practice. The student who chooses this option will spend time throughout the semester in a particular religious institution or group that she is not affiliated with and record her experiences in a journal. The journal will conclude with a summary of her observations in terms of what she has learned and any insights or hypotheses that have been generated by her research. The second option allows the student to write a formal research paper that addresses a particular religion, religious practice, or a political or moral issue associated with religion or influenced by religious views. For this option, the student may also develop a hypothesis regarding religion and carry out an appropriate experiment or survey that will shed light on it. The third option entails writing a comparative analysis of any two religions or religious and philosophical perspectives. For example, this could entail comparing Eastern and Western Religions or comparing western religion to existentialism. The fourth option entails writing a sociological analysis or response to one of the books or movies on the suggested readings and movies lists. These papers should summarize the major themes and ideas and conclude with a critical analysis of the book or movie in terms of concepts and research addressed in the class.

Videos are essential to this class. There are three categories of videos, (1) Required, (2) Recommended, and (3) Suggested. Required and Recommended videos can be watched on line on Canvas. There are ten Required videos and they must be watched and will be on exams. Some of these are very short, from 15 to thirty minutes. The Recommended Videos should be watched if you want a more complete and deeper grasp of the materials. Suggested videos are videos or full-length movies that you can watch and write a paper about. They are not online. You can find them at the Marriott Library, online, or at local video stores.

Students are advised to stay at least one week ahead in the readings and assigned videos. Much of the class discussion will be based on the readings and videos, so please complete them in a timely fashion. Also, while it may appear that there are a lot of readings, most of the readings in the reader and on E-Reserve are very short, from two to four pages. The key to doing well in this class is doing the readings, watching or listening to the lectures, watching the assigned videos, and reflecting on the materials addressed in class. It is a reading, thinking, writing class.

IV. Exams and Grading

Grading for this class is based on two exams and a paper. There will be an objective midterm worth 75 points, and an objective final worth 75 points. Before each exam there will be an online review and time for the instructor to respond to any emailed questions concerning the exam. The paper is worth 60 points, making a total of 210 points possible.

Students can earn an additional 10 extra credit points. To earn 5 of these extra credit points simply go online to the class web cite and post a comment or question or reply on the discussion site 5 times during the semester. Make sure your responses have to do with class materials. Posting up to set up study groups or find out when the exam is won't count as extra credit, so post up with a comment or response. Students can also receive an additional 5 points by watching one of the recommended online-videos posted on line, and writing and submitting a two page double spaced paper summarizing the video. Extra credit points will raise your overall grade percentage score. The grading scale for the class will be 90-100% = A, 80-89% = B, 70-79% = C, 60-69% = D, 50 and below = E. If no or only a few students get 100% on the exam, I will raise the curve by adding points to all the scores, raising them all up until a number of people get 100%. If given adequate notice the syllabus maybe changed and does not constitute a contract.

V. Texts: There are two texts and some readings on E-Reserve at the Marriott Library. Many of the E-Reserve Readings are short introductory articles that may be only two or three pages long.

Gods in the Global Village. The World's Religions in Sociological Perspective.
Third Edition, Pine Forge Press, 2007

God and His Demons. Michael Parenti, Prometheus Books, 2010

Assigned Readings on E. Reserve: These can be accessed through the Marriott Library. To do this, you should go on line to the University of Utah, and under libraries, click on J. Willard Marriott. Then click on Student Course Reserves and a Search Box will appear. Type Frank Page 3440 in the Search Box. Then click the Go button and the list of reserve readings should appear. You can then click on the appropriate reading and read it online or print it out.

VI. Disabled Students

The University of Utah seeks to provide equal access to its programs, services and activities for people with disabilities. If you need academic accommodations in this class, reasonable prior notice needs to be given to the Center for Disability Services, 162 Olpin Union Building, 581-5020 (V/TDD). CDS will work with you and the instructor to make arrangements for accommodations. All written information for this course can be made available in alternative format with prior notification to the Center for Disability Services.
