I. Goals:

The primary goal of this class is to give students a sociological understanding of religion as a powerful, important, and influential social institution that is associated with many social processes and phenomena that motivate and influence how people act and see the world around them. The class will rely on a variety of methods that include comparative analysis, theoretical explanations, ethnographic studies, and empirical studies designed to help students better understand religion and its impact upon societies, global-international events, and personal well-being. This overview of the nature, functioning, and diversity of religious institutions should help students make more discerning decisions regarding cultural, political, and moral issues that are often influenced by religion.

II. Topics To Be Covered:

The course is laid out in three parts. The first section begins with a review of conventional and theoretical conceptions of religion and an overview of the importance and centrality of religion to human societies. It emphasizes the diversity and nature of "religious experience" in terms of different denominations, cultures, classes, and individuals. This is followed by overview of sociological assumptions and theories and their application to religion. A variety of theoretical schools including, functionalism, conflict theory, exchange theory, sociology of knowledge, sociobiology, feminist theory, symbolic interactionism, postmodern and critical theory will be addressed and applied to religion.

The second part of the course entails a comparative analysis of the major religions in terms of beliefs, values, norms, practices, and rituals as seen from different theoretical points of view. The comparative analysis surveys Western, Eastern, New Age, and Native American religions, and unaffiliated groups in terms of their defining beliefs and practices, and concludes with an analysis of the major commonalities and differences between Eastern and Western Religions, Alternative, Native American religions, and unaffiliated groups that include agnostics, atheists and existentialists.

The third part of the addresses issues associated with modernity, fundamentalism, and terrorism. This section also contains a critical analysis of religion in terms of the extent to which it can be constructive and destructive, and both an impediment to needed social change and an impetus for powerful social movements that address major social problems.

Throughout the course issues associated with social change, patriarchy, prejudice, violence, sexism, conflicts between science and religion, modernity, and the separation of church and state will be addressed. The course concludes with a study of master trends in religion in the 21st century, and the role that religion and spirituality may possibly play in meeting the challenges and problems of our age.

III. Pedagogy, Exams, and Papers:

This class will utilize a variety of teaching approaches that include lectures, online responses and discussion, films, and guest speakers representing different religious perspectives. There will be two midterms, a final exam, and a paper.

The paper can be from five to six double spaced pages in length. There are four options for the paper. The first option calls upon the student to do participant observer or ethnographic research on a religion or religious practice. The student who chooses this option will spend time throughout the semester in a particular religious institution or group that she is not affiliated with and record her experiences in a journal. The journal will conclude with a summary of her observations in terms of what she has learned and any insights or hypotheses that have been generated by her research in terms of existing theory and concepts. The student taking this option may also attempt to emulate a religious role model, say Jesus, Gandhi, Mohammad, Buddha, or a Shaman for a long period of time, and as something of a personal ethnography or breaching experiment, record his experience and the reactions of others and then analyze them in terms of what he has learned and how it relates to any theory or concepts discussed in class or any moral or political issues.

The second option allows the student to write a formal research paper that addresses a particular religion, religious practice, or a political or moral issue associated with religion or influenced by religious views. For this option, the student may also develop a hypothesis regarding religion and carry out an appropriate experiment or survey that will shed light on it.

The third option entails writing a comparative analysis of any two religions or religious and philosophical perspectives. For example, this could entail comparing Eastern and Western Religions or comparing western religion to existentialism, agnosticism to religious zealotry, science and religion, or faith verses skepticism.

The fourth option entails writing a sociological analysis or response to one of the books or movies on the suggested readings and movies lists. These papers should summarize the major themes and ideas and conclude with a critical analysis of the book or movie in terms of concepts and research addressed in the class.

Plagiarism will result in an E grade, so be sure to do your own work and use proper citations following either the ASA or APA guidelines. Cheating on an Exam will result in an E grade for the exam.

Videos are essential to this class. There are three categories of videos, (1) Required, (2) Recommended, and (3) Suggested. Required and Recommended videos can be watched on line on Canvas. There are about 15 Required videos and they must be watched and will be on exams. Some of these are very short, from 15 to thirty minutes, and all students should watch them, as they are on the exams. The Recommended Videos should be watched if you want a more complete and deeper grasp of the materials. Suggested videos are videos or full-length movies that you can watch and write a paper about. They are not online. You can find them at the Marriott Library, online, or at local video stores.

Students are advised to stay at least one week a head in the readings and assigned videos. Much of the class discussion will be based on the readings and videos, so please complete them in a timely fashion. Also, while it may appear that there are a lot of readings, most of the readings in the reader and on E-Reserve are very short, from two to four pages. The key to doing well in this class is doing the readings, watching or listening to the lectures, watching the assigned videos, and reflecting on the materials addressed in class. It is a reading, thinking, writing class.

IV. Exams and Grading

Grading for this class is based on three short 50 questions objective exams and a paper. Each exam will be worth 50 points. Before each exam there will be a review and time for the instructor to respond to any emailed questions concerning the exam. The paper is worth 50 points, making a total of 200 points possible.

Students can earn an additional 10 extra credit points. To earn 5 of these extra credit points simply go online to the class web page and post a comment or question or reply on the discussion board 5 times during the semester. Make sure your responses have to do with class materials. Posting up to set up study groups or find out when the exam is won't count as extra credit, so post up with a comment or response. Students can also receive an additional 5 points by watching one of the recommended online-videos posted on line, and writing and submitting a two page double spaced paper summarizing the video. Extra credit work must be completed before the final exam. Extra credit points will raise your overall percentage score. The grading scale for the class will be 90-100%=A, 80-89%=B, 70-79%=C, 60-69%=D, 60 and below=E. If no one or only a few students gets 100%, I will add points to all the scores until a number of students get 100%, thus adjusting the curve upward. If given adequate notice the syllabus may be changed and does not constitute a contract.

In studying for exams, I urge the students to first read the materials and watch assigned videos, then go over your lecture notes and weekly reviews. Much of the exam materials will be on the weekly reviews.

Graduate students taking this lower division class for graduate credit must cover the required readings and videos and all the recommended readings and videos, and when relevant, address them in any written work or papers which may be substantially longer than papers required for undergraduates. Of course, all students are invited to read the recommended readings and watch the recommended videos, as they will enhance your understanding of the subject matter, but they are not required.

Lecture notes can be found on Pages on the Homepage in Canvas. I advise students to print out the week's lecture notes and bring them to class. On average, we will cover about five lecture notes per week in this bi-weekly class. In that the lecture notes are divided into half hour segments, that's the equivalent of a class meeting two or three times a week. I will be posting them as the class progresses.

V. Texts: There are two texts and some readings on E-Reserve at the Marriott Library. The majority of the E-Reserve Readings are short introductory articles that may be only two or three pages long. The total amount of time spent per week on reading materials and watching videos should average about three to four hours per week, which is appropriate if not light for a three credit hour class.
